Abstract: The aim of the current study was to assess the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of young adults with a history of alcohol use disorder (AUD). The study was conducted in a controlled setting, and participants were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group received a 12-week program of physical and psychological exercises, while the control group received no intervention. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and psychological well-being compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week period. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for young adults with a history of AUD.
