A Time for War John Birmingham, 2005-12-01 In the fourth Quarterly Essay of 2005 John Birmingham ponders the Australian way of war After East Timor and Bali a combination of primal fear and primal ambition has transformed attitudes to our region to security and to war as an instrument of politics Australian defence policy has become more assertive and our armed forces are being radically restructured and hardened Australia now has the capacity and even the will to act as a military power in its region A Time for War begins with a gripping account of Operation Anaconda the 2002 battle in Afghanistan to which Australian special forces made a crucial contribution Birmingham also looks at our war dreaming the sanctification of Anzac Day and the eclipse of the Vietnam Syndrome Ranging from Sir John Monash to Peter Cosgrove from Rudyard Kipling to The One Day of the Year he finds that our armed forces can now do no wrong and that politicians have taken note The new militarism is not simply a response to September 11 he argues it marks a deeper shift in the culture It being an RSL we would stand each night at six o'clock for the prayer of remembrance It was always a moving occasion a strange suspended moment when the pokies and racing channel the piped music and the drunken bullshitting all fell away Friends from overseas who witnessed the quiet ceremony never failed to be impressed One a poet from Czechoslovakia had always thought Australians to be a
