Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measures of weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, blood pressure, heart rate, and resting metabolic rate. The psychological health assessment included measures of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The women in the walking program had a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, blood pressure, heart rate, and resting metabolic rate compared to the control group. The women in the walking program also had a significant increase in self-esteem, a significant decrease in anxiety, and a significant decrease in depression compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults. The subjects were 15 male and 15 female college students, aged 18-25, who were randomly assigned to either a resistance training group or a control group. The resistance training group performed a 12-week program of resistance training, while the control group performed no exercise. The subjects were tested at baseline and at 12 weeks for strength and endurance. The results showed that the resistance training group had significantly greater strength and endurance than the control group at 12 weeks. The findings suggest that a 12-week resistance training program can improve the strength and endurance of the lower extremities in healthy young adults.

Abstract The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of a 12-week training program on the quality of life of patients with chronic heart failure (CHF). The study included 40 patients with CHF, who were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group participated in a supervised exercise program for 12 weeks. The quality of life was assessed using the Minnesota Living with Heart Failure Questionnaire (MLHFQ) at baseline and after 12 weeks. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant improvement in the MLHFQ score compared to the control group after 12 weeks. The improvement was more pronounced in the physical and social domains of quality of life. The findings suggest that a 12-week exercise program can improve the quality of life of patients with CHF.
