Wives And Lovers By Jane Elizabeth Varley:

Wives and Lovers Jane Elizabeth Varley, 2003 Victoria Stratford's birthday party for her husband David is a resounding success. It shows off their beautiful Wimbledon house, their wonderful children, their perfect lives, and it conceals the tensions and ambitions that infest their marriage. While Victoria graciously welcomes her guests, the only person missing is David himself. Victoria's sister Clara and her husband Tom are there. Unworldly and idealistic, Tom scorns David's quest for wealth. While Clara is content with her job as a university lecturer and their shabby home, she is yearning for something, and Tom cannot see the growing need for happiness that may take Clara away from him. In the garden, the youngest sister Annie talks to her husband Hugo. They are ideally suited and very content with each other. The only blight on their lives is Hugo's mother Barbara, whose jealousy and possessiveness have turned into a poisonous hatred of Annie. This one evening begins a train of events that will lead each sister down a different path towards love, sex, grief, betrayal, and happiness. Each of them will learn what it is to be a wife, a sister, and a lover.

The Truth about Love Jane Elizabeth Varley, 2007 Sally has just moved into a Victorian house in London, newly converted to provide a garden flat. She's a woman with an outwardly enviable life: Married to banker Edward and mother of two-year-old Louis, the family occupies the house's upper floors. Yet beneath an apparently happy exterior, Sally struggles with the legacy of Edward's past: his ex-wife Pia, a successful and high-profile writer; his resentful step-daughter Hope; and Edward's mixed feelings about the family he left behind. When Sally discovers the house holds a secret, her need to escape the strains of her marriage, coupled with a desire to use her brain, leads her on a quest to discover the truth. But can she solve the challenges of the present as well as the past? While Sally struggles, Anna moves into the garden flat. Anna has always shunned domesticity. A driven workaholic and a highly successful television producer, ironically, her new project is a reality show called Marriage Menders. Digging beneath the surface of other people's relationships leads her to ask questions she has so far managed to avoid about the importance of love, family, and the ties of blood. When an error of judgement threatens her career and her love life, like Sally, she must choose the path of her future.
