

Drawing Conclusion

refers to information that is implied or inferred. This means that the information is never clearly stated. Writers often tell you more than they say directly. They give you hints or clues that help you "read between the lines."

Points to remember:

Drawing Conclusions

Drawing conclusions involves using logic from a passage along with what you know and thinking about the writer's words. Some writers do not explain everything in their writing. Instead, they leave certain clues that readers can use to understand what is happening.

Example

Ashton wanted to go outside and play. His father suggested they could play catch. Excited, Ashton agreed to his idea. He grabbed his mitt and shuffled it into his backpack while his father filled his duffel bag with clothes. When they arrived at the park, he noticed his father pulling out a football from his bag. Ashton asked him, "What's that for?" His father replied, "To play catch." Ashton was clearly confused.

Ask yourself...

- 1. What does the writer tell me?
- 2. What does the writer not tell me?
- 3. What do I know about the situation?
- 4. What do I know about the characters?
- 5. What is the writer trying to say?

Look for useful hints

Ashton and his father used to play catch. Ashton brought his mitt. His father brought his football.

Use what you know

You can often use a football or a football in a game of playing catch.

Make a reasonable guess

Both Ashton and his father have different conclusions based on the suggestion to play catch.

Drawing conclusions from an unfamiliar situation may be a hard task.
