

Foreword

Dramatic changes in American health care will dominate the 21st century. Advances in science, new theories of caring, and the application of knowledge into practice contribute to this changing environment and affect the education and delivery of nursing services. The challenges to nursing education for preparing tomorrow's practitioner are huge. Evidence-based practice generated from real-life situations will enhance care of older adults. The older person will dominate nursing care, and stands to gain from this changing environment.

Additions to this edition further elaborate the care described in the original text. The inclusion of healthy-aging tips expands the nurse's repertoire of strategies in caring for the older person.

This text offers the nursing professional a valuable direction in caring for life, care that is research-based, logical, and humane. The authors are experts in their fields and offer the reader a virtual tour on caring for the older person. Dr. Tabloski is an eminent researcher and practitioner and has been a lifelong advocate for responsible, considerate, and expert nursing care for the older person. She has been a champion for the aging population. Along with her colleagues, she presents challenges and solutions for caring for our aging population. She and her colleagues make it fun to care for those who are aging, and have influenced many nurses over the years toward this new attitude and vision. The users of this text will discover this vision and will come to know the pleasure of caring for the older person.
