As international organizations, governments and private companies all have a role to play in the development of the world's poorest nations, the United Nations and World Bank have been the primary agencies in the field of economic and financial aid. The UN's Secretary-General Kofi Annan has said that the world's poorest nations are "the most vulnerable to the effects of global warming." He has called for a "global climate change treaty" that would "take into account the needs of the world's poorest nations." The World Bank has also been a major player in the development of the world's poorest nations. It has provided billions of dollars in loans and grants to help these nations develop their economies and improve their living standards.
