

- (c) You are to plan an experiment to determine as accurately as possible how the temperature change varies when different solutions are made, each with different concentrations of ammonium nitrate. You are reminded that the approximate solubility of ammonium nitrate is $2.5 \text{ mol} / 100 \text{ g}$ at 25°C .

The following information gives some of the hazards associated with ammonium nitrate.

Ammonium nitrate NH_4NO_3 . Contact with combustible material may cause fire. Explosive when mixed with combustible material.
Do not allow the salt to become contaminated with organic matter and do not grind it.
Solutions should be diluted to less than 0.5 mol dm^{-3} for disposal.

You should use only standard apparatus found in a school or college laboratory. Draw a diagram of the apparatus and experimental set up you would use showing clearly the following:

- (i) the apparatus used, such as the reaction vessel, and how the thermometer will be positioned in order to measure the temperature of the solution as accurately as possible,
- (ii) how the apparatus will be insulated.

Label each piece of apparatus used, indicating its size or capacity and both the temperature range and the precision of the thermometer.

Measuring, Modeling and Simulating the Re-adaptation Process of the Human Visual System after Short-Time Glares in Traffic Scenarios Benjamin Meyer, 2016-07-25 Benjamin Meyer performs several psycho physical experiments to measure the re adaptation process of glared drivers in traffic scenarios The author then develops a novel tone mapping algorithm to simulate the recurring contrast perception of the human eye by adjusting the displayed contrast Depending on background illumination bright light sources cause considerable perception restrictions for a glared viewer and can deter the driver from perceiving critical objects for several seconds and severely increase the risk of accidents Based on the results of the conducted user studies this vision impairment is integrated into a night driving simulator The modified driving simulation provides a more realistic visualization and enables the analysis of critical traffic scenarios including short time headlight glares This leads to better transferability of driving simulator results and enables investigating driving behavior in the presence of glare
