

Atmosphere

Atmosphere is the vast expanse of air which envelops the earth all around. It is composed of a mixture of gases which surround the earth.

It contains life giving gases like oxygen for man and animals and carbon dioxide for plants. It extends to thousands of kilometres but it has no clear cut upper limit and gradually merges with the outer space.

The atmosphere is the thin layer of gases separating earth from the outer space. The lower atmosphere is a mixture of molecules of three important gases — Oxygen ( $O_2$ ), Nitrogen ( $N_2$ ) and Carbon dioxide ( $CO_2$ ) — along with water vapor and trace amounts of several other gases that have no immediate biological importance.

The gases in the atmosphere are normally stable but under some circumstances they react chemically to form new compounds. The atmosphere is a major source of carbon and oxygen for all organisms and a source of nitrogen for a few organisms.

The gaseous mixture of the troposphere lowest layer of atmosphere in which living organisms operate) is called air containing oxygen, nitrogen and carbon dioxide, all of which cycle in nature through biogeochemical cycles.

Most of the organisms make use of these gases not only to liberate chemical energy from food during respiration but in different ways, e.g. plants use  $CO_2$  in photosynthesis and nitrogen is used by nitrogen fixing bacteria of the roots of some plants.

An imbalance in the mixture of these gases will, therefore, affect the processes that are involved in reduced aeration of soil bringing about a number of morphological and physiological effects on plants. Excess of  $CO_2$  in soil and air may result in the production of such toxins which are lethal to soil organisms and plants. All this explains the ecological significance of air.

The entire world and its materials can be grouped into non-living (abiotic) and living (biotic) components. The abiotic environment can further be classified into atmosphere, lithosphere and hydrosphere whereas biotic environment is called as biosphere.

The gaseous envelope, held to the planet by gravitational attraction of the earth is called atmosphere. The total mass of the atmosphere amounts to  $5.7 \times 10^{16}$  tons of air. It blends at about 1000 km or so above the surface of the earth. Atmosphere is a reservoir of several life supporting elements that serve many functions such as filtration of radiant energy from the sun, insulation of heat to check loss from earth's surface and stabilization of climatic conditions.
