

• Question 1

Select all that apply.

Mary lives in a small secluded village. A long time ago, the village prevented trade with surrounding communities in order to support the locals. This has worked to Mary's advantage as she is the only one in the village with cows and she has a monopoly over the trade of milk and cheese.

The village council is considering the possibility of allowing trade with surrounding villages. They believe that the entire community would benefit from a greater selection and variety of goods, as well as more customers for the goods that their village produces.

The chairman of the village council argues that removing the trade barriers would result in increased competition leading to increased quality of products and competitive prices, as everyone in the village would benefit.

The notion of removing the trade barriers will be put to a vote at the next council meeting.

The chairman of the village council realises that some of the villagers, including Mary, will be disadvantaged by the removal of trade barriers. However, he votes in favour of the removal of trade barriers as he believes that the benefits for the whole village outweighs the cost that a few of them would have to suffer.

What branch of ethics and what ethical theory is the chairman of the village council using to justify his vote?

(Select all that apply)

- A. Teleological
- B. Ethical egoism
- C. Utilitarianism
- D. Deontological
- E. Rights theory
- F. Justice theory
- G. I don't know

A and C are correct as the focus here is on the greatest good for the greatest number. This is a utilitarianism perspective, and this is part of the teleological (consequential) branch of ethical theories.

B, D, E and F are not correct as it is not ethical egoism (focused on the chief's own self-interest), nor is it linked to the deontological perspectives of rights or justice theory.

• Question 2

Accountants service the public interest in a variety of ways. This may include providing useful information to support decision making in business, government and social organisations, as well as providing community service by acting as members or committees of charities and not-for-profits as well as providing financial counselling.

Accountants also rely on skill and judgement when providing information and advice, rather than just focusing on compliance with a set of rules. This requires professional judgement, which is a critical attribute of any profession.

Regulatory fiat is a term used to describe how the accounting profession may operate in future if it fails to be a useful contributor to society and the public interest. Which of the following best describes this situation?

- A. People hire accountants because they need useful information to support decision making.
- B. Accountants are employed so that organisations can demonstrate stewardship of resources.
- C. Accountants are employed or engaged because the government has mandated certain work must be performed.
- D. Accountants are losing their ability to self-regulate because of lost credibility, and this has led to greater external regulation.
- E. I don't know

C is correct. Regulatory fiat is where a rule is mandated and must be followed. So, if governments mandate that accounts must be audited, it automatically creates work for auditors – whether or not the work is valuable or useful. So, if accountants are employed because government has required it, this means we are not as important or useful, which limits our ability to be professionals.
