

Developmental Disabilities: Best Practice and Support

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

The first mention of developmental disability (DD) at the state legislative level is given in the last century. In 1975, the government signs "The DD Act," ruling those conditions that affect the possibility of human development. They cause varying degrees of functional limitations regarding learning, group behavior, language, communication, socialization or mobility of a person. The most common conditions in the world include Down syndrome, autism or cerebral palsy. It is important to note that in families with a special child, the environment and his psychological well-being play a significant role in development. Since the main influence on a child with special needs is the family, the situation in the house should be appropriate. Family therapy in such cases helps parents and other family members accept what happened and work through the grief. Thus, attending support groups and treating the problem through family therapy can create a healthier environment for a child with special needs to develop more successfully.

Treatment for a Developmental Disability

The question of family therapy and the creation of support groups for families with similar problems has arisen relatively recently. The origins of support for families with special needs date back to around the 1950s after the end of World War II (Hanna, 2018). Medicine throughout the country was improving, the economy was getting stronger, and the entire territory was marked by the struggle for civil rights. These factors in the political, economic and social spheres set the stage for the emergence of family therapy and support groups.

Later, a wider movement to help families began, which became a turning point in therapy. In the 1960s, more active participation of parents with children with disabilities in the social life of society began. There was an association of parents who saw their goal as helping their children with developmental disabilities. They proclaimed the idea

Museums and Education Eilean Hooper-Greenhill,2007-12-12 At the beginning of the 21st century museums are challenged on a number of fronts The prioritisation of learning in museums in the context of demands for social justice and cultural democracy combined with cultural policy based on economic rationalism forces museums to review their educational purposes redesign their pedagogies and account for their performance The need to theorise learning and culture for a cultural theory of learning is very pressing If culture acts as a process of signification a means of producing meaning that shapes worldviews learning in museums and other cultural organisations is potentially dynamic and profound producing self identities How is this complexity to be measured What can this measurement reveal about the character of museum based learning The calibration of culture is an international phenomenon and the measurement of the outcomes and impact of learning in museums in England has provided a detailed case study Three national evaluation studies were carried out between 2003 and 2006 based on the conceptual framework of Generic Learning Outcomes Using this revealing data Museums and Education reveals the power of museum pedagogy and as it does questions are raised about traditional museum culture and the potential and challenge for museum futures is suggested Marketing and the Common Good Patrick E. Murphy, John F. Sherry Jr., 2013-07-24 Marketing is among the most powerful cultural forces at work in the contemporary world affecting not merely consumer behaviour but almost every aspect of human behaviour While the potential for marketing both to promote and threaten societal well being has been a perennial focus of inquiry the current global intellectual and political climate has lent this topic extra gravitas Through original research and scholarship from the influential Mendoza School of Business this book looks at marketing s ramifications far beyond simple economic exchange It addresses four major topic areas societal aspects of marketing and consumption the social and ethical thought sustainability and public policy issues in order to explore the wider relationship of marketing within the ethical and moral economy and its implications for the common good By bringing together the wide ranging and interdisciplinary contributions it provides a uniquely comprehensive and challenging exploration of some of the most pressing themes for business and society today

Decolonial Futures Christine J. Hong, 2021-03-01 A book on teaching and learning in theological education Decolonial Futures Intercultural and Interreligious Intelligence for Theological Education is guided by the questions What makes education intercultural and interreligious How might we rethink and redesign spaces of learning to be hospitable to cultural and religious differences as well as to dismantle the coloniality of theological education How might we subvert traditionally colonial spaces to model the engaged intercultural and interreligious world that we seek The book helps educators and practitioners of intercultural and interreligious learning both deconstruct and reconstruct spaces of learning by centering interreligious and intercultural intelligence through the voices experiences and narratives of minoritized people
