Terrestrials & Co. Roberto Messori, 2024-04-25 After the three previous books in the SUPERFLY series dedicated to the imitations of mayflies caddisflies and stoneflies this fourth work offers 41 imitative models of those terrestrial and aquatic invertebrates which for more or less incidental reasons can become prey to fish The most intriguing aspect is that while for the aforementioned triad of aquatic insects we refer to fairly rigid construction schemes to imitate insects such as beetles

bees bumblebees grasshoppers dragonflies caterpillars or dipterans the schemes become innumerable and this does not only because their shapes are such but because by straying into models of pure fantasy we would inevitably end up imitating some strange invertebrate that nature has already produced several million years ago These models made with natural materials are designed to obtain the maximum possible compromise between imitativity flotation ease of execution and above all effectiveness The work presents 41 models whose construction is illustrated step by step by high resolution photos with explanations of the various operations the imitations are associated with 95 photos of the imitated invertebrates and presents 33 construction typologies mostly original Editorial format and characteristics hardback cover size 22 x 28 cm 224 pages coated paper
