

LAB – Fish DissectionBackground Information

Fish are the largest group of vertebrates found in fresh and salt water. In fact, over 25,000 species of fish comprise about 50% of the vertebrate population. Part of the reason for the large number of fish is due to how well adapted they are to life in an aquatic environment. In this lab you will observe the external and internal structures of a typical bony fish. You will see how its structures make it ideally suited to living in an aquatic environment.

Procedure

1. Obtain a fish, gloves, and dissecting tools. Most of these should already be set out at the lab tables.
2. Look at your fish and orient yourself with the positioning of the fish (e.g. anterior, posterior, dorsal, ventral). Also become familiar with the external structures of the fish.

2. Open and close the fish's mouth to observe the actions of the mandible and maxilla.
 - a. Describe the movement.

When a fish opens and closes its mouth, the movements of the mandible (lower jaw) and maxilla (upper jaw) can vary depending on the specific species of fish. In general, the mandible is the primary moving part, while the maxilla remains relatively stationary.

During the opening of the fish's mouth, the mandible moves downward and forward, creating space between the jaws. This movement allows the fish to take in water or capture prey. When closing the mouth, the mandible moves upward and backward to bring the jaws back together.
