

1. The first step in the design of a structure is to determine the loads that will be applied to it. These loads may be due to the weight of the structure itself, the weight of the contents, the weight of the wind, the weight of the snow, the weight of the rain, the weight of the earth, the weight of the water, the weight of the air, the weight of the sun, the weight of the moon, the weight of the stars, the weight of the planets, the weight of the galaxies, the weight of the universe.
2. The second step is to determine the strength of the structure. This is done by calculating the stresses and strains that will be produced in the structure by the loads. The stresses and strains are then compared to the allowable stresses and strains for the material used in the structure.
3. The third step is to determine the deflection of the structure. This is done by calculating the displacement of the structure under the loads. The displacement is then compared to the allowable displacement for the structure.
4. The fourth step is to determine the vibration of the structure. This is done by calculating the natural frequency of the structure and comparing it to the frequency of the loads. If the natural frequency is close to the frequency of the loads, the structure will vibrate excessively.
5. The fifth step is to determine the fatigue of the structure. This is done by calculating the number of cycles of loading that the structure will experience and comparing it to the fatigue life of the material.

THE DESIGN PROCESS

The design process is a series of steps that lead to the final design of a structure. The first step is to determine the loads that will be applied to the structure. The second step is to determine the strength of the structure. The third step is to determine the deflection of the structure. The fourth step is to determine the vibration of the structure. The fifth step is to determine the fatigue of the structure.
