Ford anti-freeze, available at Ford dealers, is very satisfactory. Also, Ethylene-Glycol, glycerine, or alcohols are satisfactory anti-freeze solutions. These are all organic and like water will cause rusting in any metal containing iron. This iron rusting can be controlled by the use of a suitable inhibitor. Ford anti-freeze, Ethylene Glycol, some radiator glycerines and some brands of alcohol, as marketed, contain an effective inhibitor to control this corrosion.

Among the inorganic anti-freezes commonly offered to the public, calcium chloride solutions are probably the most destructive. However, other solutions such as honey, glucose, sugar, also oils, are harmful and are not recommended.

Dusty Operation • Owners operating their cars over unpaved roads should frequently check the engine ventilator screen in oil filler cap (see Figure 23) and the carburetor air cleaner (see Figure 4) to see that they do not become obstructed with dust.

In excessively dusty operation a Ford oil-bath type air cleaner should be used. This will be found a profitable investment under these conditions, in many cases increasing the life of the engine several hundred per cent.

Cars operated under dusty conditions should have the engine oil changed as often as necessary to keep the oil free from dust.

Cold Weather Suggestions • Lighter oils must be used in cold weather. (See Page 16.)

The generator charging rate will probably have to be increased. (See Page 28.)

Avoid racing the engine while it is cold.

Hold the clutch pedal down while starting the engine. This will lessen the load on the starting motor and battery, thus permitting easier starting.
